NOT THE "BARKER" WANTED.

Man of This Name Misunderstood

An incident on the Pike at the Exposi-tion yesterday caused A. R. Rogers, owner of "Jim-Key," the educated horse, a grea deal of amusement. Mr. Rogers was advertising for an additional "barker" to evoloit the wonders of Jim-Key. He wanted a finely dressed magnetic gentle man to stand at the entrance and give by his presence and power of his voice the ssion to the visiting public that they would make the error of their life if the did not see the most wonderful educated horse in the world. Mr. Rogers had the sign put up on the "Shoot the Chutes," which is one of his many concessions. Many were the applicants who applied for this position, but Mr. Rogers was particular and none came

About 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon Jim-Key building. Mr. Rogers was very busy with some of the directors of his various shows, when the rural district visitor broke into the meeting and stated:

I see a sign up that they want me." Mr. Rogers tried to find out what was cited and said, "I didn't know that anyone know if there was anything wrong at the visitor replied: "I am A. Barker." It was some time before Rogers could find out A. Barker. The country man was much auryfised when Mr. Rogers told him what the sign meant-that a barker, in show paranos, meant a talker in front of a o'clock to-night. Admission, with seat, 2

Around the Edges of Chicago , Angry Posses Seek Girl's Murderer.

Scores of Parties, Each With Its Own Rope, Search for Man Who Strangled Minnie Harmening to Death.

Chicago, Oct. 5.-With ropes and rifles in hand, a posse of farmers from the vicinity of Palatine are ranging the northern part of Cook County to-night on a man hunt for the murderer of Minnie Harmening, 17 years old, who was attacked in a barn at her home, three miles from the village, late this afternoon and choked to death by her assailant.

The body was discovered by the girl's brother, John Harmening, fifteen minutes after she had left the house. An alarm was at once given, and scores of excited neighbors started a search, with a lynch ing in view.

There were evidences that the girl had fought her assailant fiercely, and the latter, believing he had been recognized, i is thought, strangled his victim and fied. Ar nightfall the search was still on, Mer in wagons joined in the chase and each wagon carried a rope. Open declarations were made that when the murderer is caught he will be instantly strung up to the nearest tree.
